

DUNN HELD TRAIN BY AWFUL WHOPPER

Missed Ferry-Boat En Route to Monticello, N. J., but Induced Despatcher to Hold Cars by Agonizing Story.

Former Sheriff "Tom" Dunn overcame many vicissitudes of city travel yesterday, making a dare-devil and breakneck dash to catch the ferry-boat which connected with the last train for Monticello, N. J. It was a triumphant battle, too, for the former Sheriff not only succeeded in holding up the Monticello express for twenty minutes, but was rewarded with the thanks and congratulations of several belated travelers who would have been left behind but for Dunn's characteristic energy and wit.

Among those who benefited by the former Sheriff's resourcefulness was a dignified Catholic priest who was hurrying to celebrate first mass this morning in the Catholic church of Monticello. It is recorded that the good man was forced into a somewhat humiliating position by Dunn's irresolute and what proved to be rather reprehensible method of holding up the Monticello train, and because of a terrific white lie that Dunn told in the presence of the father, a penance of ten "Hall Marys" was imposed on "Tom" which he must observe for thirty days or be forever a sinner.

Boat Just Gone.
The ferry-boat connecting with the train had just pulled out of the slip as Dunn breathlessly dashed into the ferry house. He had raised two blockades on the Eighth avenue surface line during the wild dash down town in a trolley car, by dragging a prostrate horse from the track one minute and causing the arrest of a trolley car the next, only to find his boat waiting in mid-stream as he reached the ferry-house.

"Give me the train despatcher, quick," shouted Dunn, waving his telephone wire, while the priest stood just outside the door of the booth with attentive ear.

Told an Awful Whopper.
"How are you, Mr. Train Despatcher? I am Sheriff Dunn, yes, Sheriff Dunn, yes, of New York. How are you? Glad to meet you again, even at long range. I am something of a nervous person, and just missed the boat connecting with the Monticello train. I am a sinner, and the priest and several relatives. Yes, it is the dying request of my sister-in-law, and here is the priest right beside me. Won't you hold the train for twenty minutes, please, to be a dying woman? Yes, the priest is right beside me. All right, I'll hold it for you."

Then turning to the good man, the cool and unperturbed Dunn gently laid hold of the priest's arm and said: "Tell him, Father, you are the priest. You needn't say the rest if you don't want to."

The clergyman raised his hands warningly. "Man alive, would you have me tell a deliberate falsehood?" he began in protest.

"Now, Father, tell him you are the priest and I promise you you'll say mass at Monticello to-morrow morning, and I'll attend it, too, I promise you," and gently pushing the reluctant clergyman into the telephone booth, Dunn closed the door and left him to his fate.

Priest Was Solemn.
In a few moments the door of the telephone booth opened and the clergyman came out with serious and solemn mien.

"Will he hold the train?" asked Dunn anxiously, prepared for another scheme if that one had failed. The answer came almost whispered:

"The man at the other end of the wire will hold the train for the next hour," and the priest smiled at Dunn from behind the telephone booth, as he raised one hand and said: "May God have mercy on your soul."

It was after the train was boarded and Dunn and the priest and the other belated travelers were dashing at a mile a minute toward Monticello that the priest imposed the penance of ten "Hall Marys."

SKULL FRACTURED BY FALLING HAMMER.
John J. Donlin, a mason and builder, of No. 323 Franklin avenue, Brooklyn, had his skull fractured this afternoon by a hammer which fell from the hands of a workman at work on the second story of a building being erected at No. 6 Broad street. He was taken to Hudson Street Hospital.

MOTHER KILLED BABE AND SELF

Mrs. Annie Eagan, Deserter by Her Husband, Turned on the Gas in Her Scantily Furnished Room.

Locked in the embrace of death, the bodies of Annie Eagan, twenty-four years old, and her seventeen-month-old baby were found to-day in the room which Mrs. Eagan occupied in the top floor of No. 314 Fifty-fifth street. In the mouth of the mother was a rubber tube which had been connected with the only gas jet in the room.

Two months ago Thomas Eagan, a printer by trade, left his wife and child. Life was a hard struggle, even when he was there to provide for the family. When he disappeared Mrs. Eagan worked out for her living, returning every night with her child to their single-room hovel, bare even of the necessities of life.

Despairing of what the future might bring, Mrs. Eagan came home last night and determined to end all. She deliberately planned the death of her child on her own handwriting. It told the complete story. In it she said that her husband had left her, that she was unable to get along without him and so killed herself. Mrs. Eagan has no relatives in New York, and the bodies were taken to the Morgue.

FATALLY BURNED, SHE CALLS FOR SON

Woman Dying from Her Injuries Returns to Consciousness in the Ambulance and Pleads to Have Her Boy Sent For.

Her dress a mass of flames, Mrs. Margaret O'Callahan, forty-one years old, of No. 559 Halsey street, Brooklyn, rushed out of her home to-day and, frantic with pain and fear, fell exhausted and unconscious in the rear of the house.

Men and women on the street rushed to her assistance, smothering the flames. Mrs. Halley was taken to the Bushwick Hospital, where little hope is entertained for her recovery.

Mrs. O'Callahan was lighting an oil stove when her dress caught fire. The stove exploded, scattering the fire over the room and setting fire to the curtains. When the burned woman was being taken to the hospital in an ambulance, she regained consciousness.

"Please send for my boy," she said. "I am dying, but I want to see him." Her son is fourteen years old and is a student at the Brooklyn High School. He left his classroom for his mother's bedside at the hospital soon after.

TRIED SUICIDE BUT AIM BAD.
One Shot Out of Four, Fired by Paterson Man Took Effect.

PATERSON, N. J., Nov. 19.—Charles Wilkesman, living in a furnished room at No. 37 Elm street, attempted to commit suicide to-day by shooting himself in the stomach. He fired four shots, only one of which took effect.

The police say the man had been drinking heavily for late and his mind had become deranged. He was taken to the General Hospital, where it was said he might recover.

Driving Admirers Away.
"Why is it that all the men who used to be crazy over Miss Brightly do not go near her now?"

"Some enemy spread a report." "Said there was a skeleton in the family closet?"

"No, said she was a bachelor girl."

SUES AS FIANCEE FOR INSURANCE

Katherine B. Howe Claims $15,000, Amount of Three Policies on the Life of Peter Silcock, Cotton Exporter.

Katherine B. Howe, a handsome and very pronounced golden blonde in a seakind coat, suing Caroline S. Hagan, sister and administratrix of Peter Silcock, well known cotton exporter, for $15,000, the amount of three policies of insurance on the life of Silcock, claims the money on an assignment of the policies to her by Silcock as his affianced wife.

The fair claimant so testified in answer to questions of her counsel, ex-Judge Brundage said he proposed to show that the pretty claimant was Mrs. Bennett and not divorced, and that she could not have been "Pete" Silcock's affianced bride, although the assignment signed by him on the back of the policies read:

"I hereby assign, transfer and set over to Kate B. Howe, my affianced wife, the within three policies."

"When did you become Miss Howe?" asked the Buffalo lawyer. "When I went out with Donnelly & Co."

Could Not Remember.
Letters and telegrams signed "Mrs. Bennett" were shown to the witness, but she declared she could not remember whether she sent them or not. She denied that she ever was married to a man by the name of Bennett.

Mrs. Lena W. Dunlop, wife of the proprietor of the Hotel Dunlop, at Atlantic City, testified that she and her husband dined with Peter Silcock and Mrs. Howe at the Cafe Martin one Sunday just before Silcock's death, and that she and her husband went to go with him and Kate to the Little Church Around the Corner and be witnesses to their marriage.

"My husband and I were married there," said Mrs. Dunlop, blushing, "and they wanted to be married the same as we were."

Mrs. Dunlop said Silcock died before the marriage day set, and under cross-examination declared that Silcock had been drinking when he talked of marriage.

Roosevelts Send Floral Tribute to Monroe Graves.
RICHMOND, Nov. 19.—The remains of the late daughter of President Monroe have been brought to this city and interred beside the grave of the President in Hollywood Cemetery. Senators Daniel and Martin, Representative Lamb and many of the city's descendants were in the party. The services were conducted by Bishop Gibbons. Among the floral tributes sent by President and Mrs. Roosevelt.

Gerard in "Laughing Gas," she replied. "Was a Man-About-Town."

Peter Silcock was a well-known man-about-town. He died last January at the home of his sister, Mrs. Hagan, leaving nothing except several policies of insurance on his life.

Silcock began life as a salesman in Charles. When he died he was a leader in the China cotton export trade. He and Kate Howe were close friends, she claiming that he often imported her to marry him, and she finally consented. Later he assigned the policies to her.

Silcock also left a brother, John Silcock, and a sister, Mrs. Sue Chase. Judge Brundage showed a money-order receipt signed "Mrs. D. C. Bennett," at Baltimore, and asked Kathleen Howe if she ever received for $500 in that way.

Justice McCall ruled the question out, and declared that he was not going to allow any extraneous matter in the case.

AGED WOMAN WINS DESPITE EXPERT
Mrs. Lancaster Said Her Father's Horses Were Skillfully Handled, but Jury Gave Mrs. Hayes $2,500 Damages.

Although Mrs. Ellen Louise Moore Lancaster, who qualified as an expert in the management of horses and the business of a whip by saying she was an expert horsewoman, driving one horse, a span, three horses in team or tandem or a four-in-hand, testified that the coachman was handling her father's team skillfully, the jury gave a verdict for $2,500 to Mrs. Bridget Hayes, who was run down and injured.

The case was tried to-day before Justice Herrick, of Albany, in Part IX, of the Supreme Court. J. B. Marshall appeared in behalf of Mrs. Hayes and Mr. Zabriskie for William L. Moore, owner of the team and father of the two ladies who occupied the coupe when it ran Mrs. Hayes down.

Mrs. Hayes testified that when she was struck she clutched the trimmings on the harness of the high horse just back of the saddle.

The horses pranced and danced, and she hung on with all her strength until finally she was forced to let go and dropped upon the pavement. The rear wheel of the coupe went over her foot, crushing it and making her a cripple for the remainder of her life. She sued for $5,000 damages.

Mrs. Ellen Louise Moore Lancaster and her sister, Mrs. Mary E. M. Crankshank, testified that Bridget Hayes

Mrs. Ellen Louise Moore Lancaster and her sister, Mrs. Mary E. M. Crankshank, testified that Bridget Hayes had crossed to safety some distance ahead of the horses, then had seemed to become panic-stricken and turned back just at the psychological moment, which made it impossible for the coachman to stop the horses or turn them around.

The jury was out only twenty minutes.

SAY HE ROBBED CASH TILL.
Man Accused of Taking $23.85 from a Saloon.

James Bagley was arraigned on the charge of grand larceny in the Morrisania Court to-day.

According to Joseph Murphy, a bartender who is employed at No. 2385 Washington street, he was about to close the saloon a few nights ago when Bagley entered the place and robbed the cash drawer. Peter Adrian entering the place when he saw Bagley open the cash drawer. According to the complaint in the case $23.85 was taken. Magistrate Baker held Bagley in $500 for examination to-morrow.

Mildly Correlative.
